Dear Mr. Middeljens:

As Commodore's dedicated Account Representative from Microsoft I am glad to be able provide you a note outlining the relationship of our company's.

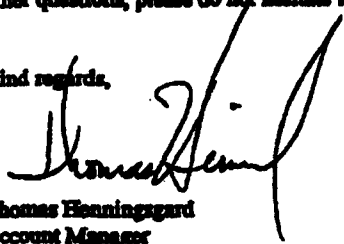

Commodore has been viewed as a strategic OEM account for Microsoft since 1990. As a strategic OEM account, Commodore is a recipient of Microsoft confidential information about our future software products. This information about future Microsoft products, (which includes operating systems, networking products, and application software) is discussed with Commodore on a regular basis so that Commodore and Microsoft may leverage one another's future product plans. In this way we may together provide our customers with systems that have been optimized to work together.

Due to this relationship with Microsoft, Commodore is also able to electronically search Microsoft's data base of product support information, so that Commodore may quickly support their customers that are using Microsoft products.

Microsoft license # 1106-0253 with Commodore enables Commodore to distribute MS DOS, MS Windows and MS Works on Commodore PC Systems distributed throughout the world, Roel, I hope this helps to clarify Commodore and Microsoft's relationship. Should you have any other questions, please do not hesitate to call.

Kind regards,

Thomas Henningsgard
